Contract awarded for privatized housing plans

Chris Rasmussen
Leader Staff

A contract has been awarded for the design, replacement and renovation of family housing units at Fort Jackson.

The Army announced May 24 the selection of GMH/Centex Military Communities to prepare a Community Development and Management Plan as part of the initiative to privatize family housing at Fort Jackson.

"We are looking forward to partnering with them to provide the best housing to our deserving military members and their families," said Emma Watson, Fort Jackson's RCI director. "We welcome input to make this happen."

The company, which will work with Army representatives, is expected to take six months to complete the plan, Watson said. The plan will then be forwarded to Congress for review and its authorization.

GMH/Centrex Military Communities is also currently partnered with Fort Bliss, Texas; Fort Carson, Colo.; Fort Detrick, Md.; Fort Eustis, Va.; Fort Gordon, Ga.; Fort Stewart, Ga. and West Point, N.Y. The partnerships are part of the Residential Communities Initiative, an Army-wide program to privatize family housing.

Jones Lang LaSalle, a real estate services and money management firm, was selected last year to complete a study of existing housing issues and needs. The study revealed that of the 1,182 housing units on Fort Jackson, 880 are considered inadequate and in need of replacement or renovation.

The firm concluded a six-year $88 million project would eliminate the inadequacies in Fort Jackson's family housing.

Once GMH/Centex Military Communities completes the plan and it is approved by Congress, implementation is expected to begin in May 2008.

RCI will improve, in a relatively short period of time, the quality of life for Soldiers and families assigned to Fort Jackson, Watson said. Over the anticipated 50-year term, all family housing will be rehabilitated or replaced and additional housing will be provided. The plan will also bring new community centers as well as other facilities and amenities to meet family housing needs.

"Providing modern, comfortable and safe homes and residential communities is very important in promoting the sense of well-being necessary to allow our Soldiers to focus on their missions," said Don Spigelmyer, RCI executive director.

"RCI is the essential element in solving the Army's family housing problems and we are committed and on track to making our Army installations safe, attractive and modern places for our Soldiers and their families to live," he said.

Currently the RCI program is comprised of 45 Army installations, which affects more than 88,000 homes — 99 percent of the Army's family housing inventory in the United States. So far, 35 installations have been privatized.

'Rainbow Room' expands, updates

Chris Rasmussen
Leader Staff

Long-range planning for Basic Combat Training at Fort Jackson has been extended by six months because of the expansion of the "Rainbow Room."

The Rainbow Room, which gets its name from the array of colored magnets that run along the walls of the Post Scheduling Room, is now capable of showing which units are training at a certain location for up to a year.

"We only had six months up on the board and you could only see two training cycles (18 weeks) at a time," said Robert Landrum, training facility coordinator. "Now a battalion commander, or anyone who wants to use training facilities at Fort Jackson, can come in and see what is going on for up to four training cycles, including block leave."

To make room for the additional planning space, an additional wall was fitted with the planning calendar. The long-range calendar that covers the walls represents Fort Jackson's 10 Basic Combat Training battalions, which consist of 57 companies. It covers all the training areas and ranges for BCT ranges and the Drill Sergeant School.

The Rainbow Room expansion will also help accommodate the future consolidation and relocation of two additional drill sergeant schools at Fort Jackson.

"The calendar is a visual aid for us and anyone else who would like to walk in and use it. Commanders stop

Programs for new parents; staying in post housing

Col. Eddie Stephens Jr.

Q I have just arrived at Fort Jackson and am expecting my first child in October. I was told that Fort Jackson has a program that provides education and support to expectant parents. How can I sign up for this program?

A The Army Community Service Soldier and Family Readiness Program have a variety of courses designed to educate and support new parents. Baby Basics is designed for the expecting first-time parent or the parent-to-be. Topics include: sibling preparation, bathing, feeding, handling, diapering and dressing the infant. Dads will receive a “Dad’s 101” instruction on becoming a father.

Baby Basics is offered from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., the first Tuesday of each month. Call 751-6325 for additional classes and information.

Q I have an assignment to Korea. Is it possible to leave my family in government housing here at Fort Jackson?

A Retention of government housing is based upon approval of the Installation Commander. Requests to retain government housing must be submitted through the post housing office not less than 30 days before departure. Call 751-7571 for more information.

My father’s legacy: teaching me who the real heroes are

Carrie David Ford
Editor

Happy Father’s Day, Daddy.
In my 32 years, I’ve spoken those words probably 30 or 31 times; unfortunately, the past five, my dad hasn’t been here to say, “Thanks kid.” You see, my father — a Soldier, veteran and survivor — died in 2002.
His death has left a gaping hole in both my and my mother’s life. We were a small family, just the three of us, and an Army family at that. Our roots were shallow but my parents carefully planted them each time we moved, so that I would have a home and as “normal” a childhood as possible.
I remember my dad telling me, “home is where your heart is.” Trite, I know, but it was a mantra repeated with each permanent change of station, and when I finally realized what he meant, I knew he had told me a truth. Home wasn’t the apartment or house or street or town where we lived. Home was my mother and father and me and the possessions that detailed our life — all the ingredients we — as a mobile, military family — needed to make a home, whether in Fort Gulick, Panama; Fort Bragg, N.C.; or Wildflecken, Germany.

My father, Kenneth David, was a retired chief warrant officer. He spent more than 20 years serving this country, which included a tour in Vietnam. My father fought for someone else’s freedom, just as today’s Soldiers are doing; however, he knew that by trying to secure freedom for another country, he was helping to protect the United States.
After retiring in 1992, he spent another 10 years serving the veterans of our Armed Forces as a veterans service officer. This was a position he took very seriously. He believed veterans and their families deserved respect, and he worked diligently to help them — whether with loans, G.I. Bill benefits or a flag and color guard for a military funeral. He reinvigorated the Memorial Day and Veterans Day services held on the county courthouse lawn so veterans would be honored and remembered — as they should be.

He worked countless hours establishing a veteran’s museum detailing northern Alabama’s military heroes dating back to the Revolutionary War. The shame, though, is that he never got to see the final product. He was in intensive care when the museum’s grand opening took place in November 2002 and never left the hospital alive.
My father taught me many things besides the meaning of home. He taught me the importance of family and of sticking together. He taught me there is no shame in losing, so long as you play your best and go out again for the next game. He taught me that there are things worth fighting for, even when you try to live a peaceful life. He taught me that I am free because of the sacrifices of others.

He also taught me what defines a hero — the regular person doing extraordinary things without thought for gain, and facing terrifying and uncertain situations with courage and calm. He taught me that Soldiers are heroes, and if he were still with us, he would be so proud of our Army, his Army, and all of its heroes.
My father was and will always be my hero, so to him, Happy Father’s Day, daddy.
And, to all of the other Army dads who are someone’s hero, both at home and abroad, Happy Father’s Day.

Crosswalks should not become crosshairs

Mike A. Glasch
Leader Staff

Since he took over as Fort Jackson's safety director in late 2004, Sean O'Brian said there have not been any pedestrian-vehicle accidents involving an injury on post. It's a record he would like to keep intact.

"In my opinion the safest place in the Midlands area should be inside these gates, and pedestrian safety is a big part of that," said O'Brian.

However, he said there have been some close calls, especially in high traffic areas such as the housing areas, along Strom Thurmond Boulevard and school zones.

"When I talk with people who either had a close call or got a speeding ticket in a school zone, I ask them, 'Why? Why were you speeding?'" O'Brian said. "The number one answer I get is, 'I was in a hurry because I was late.'"

"How do you balance late for work, against the potential for harming one of our children?" he added. "There is no justification for that sort of carelessness."

With the summer surge of Basic Combat Training Soldiers beginning, O'Brian is urging motorists to be even more alert behind the wheel, since there will be more people (Soldiers, civilians, family members and visitors) on foot around Fort Jackson.

"Anyone walking, or marching, on the installation, Soldier or civilian (family member, employee or visitor) should have the expectation that they can walk across one of our streets safely," he said. "A crosswalk should not mean you have to do a 100-meter dash to get across."

However, O'Brian is quick to point out that pedestrians share the responsibility of staying safe on the roads.

"Look both ways before you cross the street," he said. "If you see a vehicle coming, you want to make eye contact with that operator, don't just step out and assume he's seen you."

"You might feel like you have every right in the world to be there and that vehicle has to stop. That will be of little comfort to you if you become a hood ornament," O'Brian said.

Just as motorists have to follow the rules of the road, so do those who are on foot.

Fort Jackson Supplement 1 to AR 190-5 (Motor Vehicle Traffic Supervision), Chapter 5, Section 8, states that:

- a) Pedestrians will obey all traffic control devices unless otherwise directed by the MPs.
- b) The use of headphones or earphones is prohibited by individuals running on streets.
- c) Joggers, walkers or runners are to be extremely cautious when exercising on Fort Jackson. When on the roads, the above personnel will exercise on the side of the road facing oncoming traffic, keeping as close to the roadway edge as possible and making maximum use of the shoulders and walkways. Those using the roads, sidewalks or shoulder of the road during the hours of limited visibility must wear reflective armbands, vests or other items of reflective clothing or tape which enables equal clear visibility from all directions.

d) Jogging is not permitted on Marion Avenue.

When it comes to pedestrian safety, O'Brian said it comes down to simple common courtesy.

"We have to remember that we all have a right to the road," he said. "Whether we are on foot, whether we are on a bicycle, or are in a motor vehicle, we all have a right to the road and we all have a responsibility to share the road safely."

The colors on the wall calendar represent the types of training units are conducting at a particular range or training area. Red, white and blue strips represent the BCT training phase a unit is in. Yellow represents training facilities with obstacles and black is for Basic Rifle Marksmanship ranges. Staff at the Rainbow Room also schedule ranges for non-military customers such as the Drug Enforcement Agency, Federal Bureau of Investigations and Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and explosives. Fort Jackson is also popular with several local and state law enforcement agencies. New obstacle course makes Soldiers ‘Fit to Win’

Heath Hamacher
Leader Staff

To reduce wear on available facilities and training stations, and to provide units with more flexibility in their training schedules, a new Fit to Win Course was built on Fort Jackson.

The .85-mile endurance course, located directly across from the Teamwork Development Course, will be used in conjunction with the original Fit to Win. Obstacles appear in a different sequence but remain similar to those of the original.

Lt. Col. Michael N. Davey, G-3 training officer, Directorate of Plans, Training, Mobilization and Security, said the construction of the project was based on input and suggestions from the 165th and 193rd Infantry brigades, their aligned battalion unit trainers, and event cadre from the 171st Infantry Brigade.

“We asked them to provide feedback on what events challenged their BCT (Basic Combat Training) Soldiers, which did not, and what they would like to see replaced in designing the new course,” Davey said.

Davey said there were two main considerations in determining the course layout; increasing the challenges for BCT Soldiers and using available equipment to improve safety and reduce the risk of injury. Employing input from people such as range control, the safety office, and Directorate of Logistics and Engineering agencies, minor changes and modifications were made to certain obstacles.

“Each agency, with their specific area of expertise, was able to look at the course — and the intent of what we were trying to accomplish — and make suggestions and recommendations to accomplish the building of an event that will help (drill sergeants) better train BCT Soldiers while at the same time enhancing the incorporated safety features,” Davey said.

Modifications include:

- Concrete culverts that used to sit unrestrained are now fastened to the ground with metal bands that penetrate the earth about 18 inches and are secured to concrete blocks. Pieces of rubber have also been placed near the entry and exit areas of the culverts to reduce the risk of head injury.
- The horizontal ladders, or “monkey bars,” have been equipped with padding around the columns, and the bars have been welded into place so as not to roll when grabbed.
- The tops of the balance logs have been shaved to a flat surface to reduce the risk of slip and fall.
- The area on top of the cargo net obstacle is much wider, allowing Soldiers to better adjust before beginning their descent.

The course officially opened June 1 and is being used by units now. Soon, BCT Soldiers will be visiting Fit to Win II on their first day of training, allowing drill sergeants to evaluate their new warriors.

“This is their ‘welcome to the Army,’ in a sense,” said Staff Sgt. Mark Saunders, 171st Infantry Brigade instructor/writer.

Well-Being Corner

Veterans focus group raises concerns

Christina Garza
AFAP Coordinator

Fort Jackson Customer Management Services held a veteran focus group May 24 at Dorn VA Medical Center in Columbia to discuss issues affecting veterans in the Fort Jackson and surrounding community.

The focus group was held as part of the Community FIRST initiative and the Army Family Action Plan forum. The purpose of the group was to surface issues affecting veterans from a Fort Jackson perspective — what Fort Jackson can do to assist local veterans.

One issue surfaced by the veteran focus group was to establish a better way of getting information to veterans about benefits they are entitled to at Fort Jackson. Some veterans feel there is a lack of communications concerning current programs and benefits available to them.

Their recommendation was to establish a veteran's help link on the Fort Jackson Web site, which would allow veterans to determine what benefits are available to them locally.

Another issue was to allow veterans who are less than 100 percent disabled use of entitlements on Fort Jackson. Currently veterans who are less than 100 percent disabled feel excluded from the military community because they do not have the same access as 100 percent disabled veterans. Veterans would like to be a part of the Fort Jackson community, but are allowed very limited access at this time.

The final issue of importance to veterans is the amount of time and hardship they endure when trying to come onto the post. They have to go through the same security measures as someone who has never served. They feel that they should be allowed a window sticker allowing them access without going through the visitor lane.

Once the directorates or organizations review these issues they will be forwarded to the garrison commander for review and approval of those issues that can be solved at the installation level. If a higher-level approval is required, the issues will be discussed during the Well-Being Action Council and voted on to recommend forwarding to the commanding general or to be deemed unattainable.

This was the third year under the Fort Jackson Community FIRST quarterly issue resolution process that a focus group was convened just for veterans. This session was coordinated with the Dorn VA Medical Center, specifically Priscilla Creamer, public affairs/voluntary services coordinator. Also in attendance were the Fort Jackson deputy garrison commander, representatives from the Fort Jackson Customer Management Services Office and special guest J.T. McLawhorn, president and CEO of the Columbia Urban League, who was recently appointed to the National Veterans Administration Board. A special thanks to Peggy Cornwell, Cindy Scarcelli, Tonja Evans, Fort Jackson volunteers and the veterans who participated. The focus group session was well received and strengthens the bond between veterans in the community and Fort Jackson.

Honoring dads

Fathers come in all shapes, sizes, types

Heath Hamacher
Leader Staff

In 1909, Sonora Smart Dodd thought of the idea for Father's Day while listening to a Mother's Day sermon. Her father had been left to raise six children on his own when her mother died giving birth.

Dodd considered her father courageous, selfless and loving, and wanted to make sure he knew how much he meant to her.

So was the beginning of Father's Day, a time for children to honor the most important men in their lives. Since then, though, it has also become a chance for dads to reflect on fatherhood and honor their children.

To 1st Lt. Steven Trice, mobilization training officer, U.S. Army Reserve Readiness Command, being a father combines aspects of being a coach, mentor, counselor and friend. He has an 8-year-old daughter, Olivia, whom he said is "the best thing I've ever had anything to do with."

"She's pretty and she loves attention, but I always want her to focus on her inner qualities, like her spirituality and attitude," Trice said. "My quote for her is 'attitude equals altitude.'"

Trice is currently going through a divorce and said he cherishes the time he spends with his daughter. They play soccer, baseball and a little nerf football together, and have a secret handshake.

They recently competed in a Lake Carolina Elementary School talent show together where Trice shared some of his 1980s pop and lock dance moves.

"I wanted to show her that 'hey, whatever you go through in life — whether I'm with you physically or not — I'll be behind you and support you on it,'" he said.

When they're not playing sports or dazzling the crowd, the pair has a unique ritual they engage in when Olivia visits Daddy's house.

"I set up a virtual restaurant in my house," Trice said. "We have a dog, and the restaurant is called Teddy's Kitchen. Whenever Olivia comes over, I'll cook to order whatever she wants. She'll eat whatever I fix and make it seem like it came from a five-star hotel."

While Trice makes as much time as possible for his one daughter, another Fort Jackson father divides his time between seven children.

the Noncommissioned Officer Academy, married his wife, Jennifer, 16 years ago. Their first child, John (aka J.J.), was born less than a year later. Since then, their family has grown to include Jayden, 14, Jayza, 9, Jayna, 7, Jayvian, 4, JayLynn, 2, and, most recently welcomed into the world, 10-week-old Jayohna.

Riley said he and his wife never planned on having seven children. He said they didn't actually plan on having one, but were open to whatever God gave them.

"I couldn't see it any other way. I'm proud of each and every one of them," Riley said. "I love them very much and wouldn't trade them for the world."

So what does a man with seven children do on Father's Day? As little as possible, according to Riley. He said the most strenuous thing he does is spearhead a favorite pastime of his — a cook-out. The self-proclaimed grill master said steak and ribs are at the top of the menu on this holiday.

"Normally, the kids will bring me breakfast in bed and pretty much just let me lounge around the whole day," Riley said. "My wife always surprises me with something or another. She'll decorate or plan something where we all go out as a family."

Just pile in the car and drive off as one big, happy family. Only there's one problem — Riley hasn't found a vehicle big enough yet. He owns an eight-passenger van which, as it turns out, is one seat short, and a truck. Unless J.J. or Jayden are out "doing their own thing," the Rileys will be using both automobiles.

And it's not just getting from Point A to Point B that presents a challenge, it's Point A. Home. Riley has had issues with housing not being big enough and said he can't convince some realtors that three or four bedrooms just won't cut it.

So, he lives on post in quarters that have been modified so that two three-bedroom units are combined into one dwelling.

Travel and housing aside, the major challenge Riley faces, he said, is finding the time to be everywhere at once: different children, different interests, different times and different places. But Riley doesn't sweat the juggling act, he just wants to make sure his children understand that he loves them all and isn't playing favorites.

"Being a father means you're truly blessed to have children. Not to put a label on them to say 'they're my property,' but to say to the world 'these are my children,'" Riley said. "I'd do it all over again."

Whether one child or seven, both fathers take an active role in raising their children and giving them the skills they will need to succeed in life. And loving every minute of it.

Sounds like Sonora Smart Dodd just may have been onto something.

Interim policy allows Soldiers to retain ACUs following redeployment

J.D. Leipold

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A temporary change to Army uniform policy now allows active-duty Soldiers to retain the Army Combat Uniforms they were issued prior to deployment into combat zones.

Legislation is presently on Capitol Hill for consideration by Congress which would allow the interim change to become permanent. A final decision is expected by the end of September.

According to Col. Rebecca Samson, chief, Troop Support Division, Army G-4: “Organizational Clothing and Individual Equipment is the property of the Army, not the individual Soldier, so the Army cannot give OCIE-issued ACUs to Soldiers because it’s prohibited without proper authority.

“If Congress approves the proposed legislation, then deploying Soldiers can retain OCIE-issued ACUs worn in combat,” she added. “The benefit is that Soldiers won’t have to go through the turn-in procedures of OCIE-issued ACUs they wore in the combat environment.”

Active Army Soldiers may retain their ACUs issued through OCIE guidance as listed on their OCIE clothing record until permanent change of station, expiration of term of service or retirement, whichever occurs first.

Redeploying Soldiers from all components who will end their term of service must turn in ACUs — including coats, trousers and the infrared flag, regardless of condition — to their home station, or demobilization clothing issue points.

Reserve and National Guard Soldiers are allowed to retain ACUs issued as OCIE when the mobilization stations perform a lateral transfer to their unit’s property book officer.

Clothing records of individual Soldiers from all components deploying through the continental United States replacement centers will be maintained by the center’s PBO until they can be transferred. Upon redeployment through the centers, Soldiers will be allowed to retain one set of ACUs for up to 120 days for ceremonial purposes; then they must be returned to the clothing issue points or sent to the Soldiers’ property book officers.

Questions on OCIE-issued ACUs may be addressed to Shirley Bryant-Harper at (703) 614-0956, e-mail: Shirley.bryant-harper@hqda.army.mil, or Col. Rebecca Samson at (703) 693-9957, e-mail: Rebecca.samson@hqda.army.mil.

Leadership crucial to developing Iraqi security forces

Jim Garamone

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Iraqi security units have developed to the point where they can assume a greater share of the security burden, said the U.S. general in charge of training those forces until earlier this week.

Army Lt. Gen. Martin E. Dempsey turned over command of Multinational Security Transition Command Iraq to Army Lt. Gen. James Dubik on June 10 in Baghdad and testified before the House Armed Services Committee oversight subcommittee today.

Dempsey gave an unvarnished assessment of the progress and roadblocks in training and equipping the Iraqi army, national police and local police.

“My overall assessment is that many units, especially the Iraqi army units, have become increasingly proficient and have demonstrated both their improved capability and resolve in battle,” he said.

But both army and police units continue to be hampered by a lack of depth, he said. “They have a lack of tactical staying power of sufficient capability to surge forces locally,” Dempsey told the representatives.

And all security organizations suffer from shortages of leaders from the tactical to the national level, he said.

As conditions in the country change, goals are readjusted and the security situation requires more soldiers and police. For example, the command reached its goal for “trained and equipped” soldiers in December 2006, only to have the goal upped by 45,000. Since then, the goal has risen another 20,000.

Dempsey’s command generates units and individual replacements, develops institutional processes — logistics, financial, manpower, fuel — necessary to support fielded forces and professionalizing Iraqi forces and leaders.

Changes in the Iraqi government also are being felt through the ranks of the military and police, Dempsey said. Through 2005, the United States paid for all Iraqi security forces, he said. In 2006, the Iraqi government assumed responsibility for all life support for Iraqi forces. “We learned the importance of developing both the tactical and the institutional sectors of the forces simultaneously,” he said.

The central government pays all Iraqi soldiers and police, the general said. The government also is paying for subsistence and barracks.

“The ministries of Defense and Interior are functioning institutions who feel themselves responsible for the security of the nation and for their security forces,” Dempsey said. “Challenges remain, but we should not underestimate the importance of having a coherent, accountable and responsible Iraqi chain of command from individual soldier and policeman to the ministers of defense and interior.”

More work needs to be done, especially at the ministries. He said Iraqi business practices “are horribly inefficient and ineffective,” and there are few skilled civil servants. Still, there is progress.

This year, the government of Iraq will spend more on its security forces than the United States government. Next year, the Iraqis will outspend the U.S. by a 2-to-1 margin, he said.

“If the government feels itself accountable to the soldier and understands its responsibility to provide him resources, then the soldier, in turn is going to feel his loyalty to the central government. We consider this an important measure of progress,” Dempsey said.

The general said the challenge for 2008 is to find an adequate number of leaders to lead the security forces.

“We’ve been growing young second lieutenants through the military academies for three years,” he said. “But it’s very difficult to grow majors, lieutenant colonels and brigadier generals. It simply can’t be done overnight.”

Dempsey said the Iraqi people and their leaders are working in an incredibly challenging and dangerous environment. “The people of Iraq have demonstrated resolve and resiliency in withstanding the assaults of extremists and seem to be committed to make a better life for themselves, their families and their nation,” he said. “The leaders and the people of Iraq have not given up on themselves. We should not give up on them.”

Read to win Harry Potter books, prizes

Theresa O'Hagan
Morale, Welfare and Recreation

Morale, Welfare and Recreation and the Thomas Lee Hall (Post) Library are encouraging children to read this summer by offering incentives, like a chance to win the new Harry Potter book and passes to Century Lanes Bowling Center, Palmetto Greens Miniature Golf and Palmetto Falls Water Park.

The program ends Aug. 13 and all MWR-eligible patrons between 8 and 16 years old may enter. Older or younger children, however, may participate but they need to be reading age-appropriate books to count toward prizes and rewards. This will be left up to the discretion of the librarian.

How the contest works: Participants must read chapter books at least 100 pages long for the book to be counted on their reading log toward rewards and to qualify for the grand prize. Children older than 16 must read books at their reading level or higher that have at least 200 pages. Children younger than 8 may read age appropriate books of any length.

Each child is given a reading log with 20 spaces to be stamped by the Library staff as they complete their reading. Once the log is filled it is entered into the drawing for one of 18 Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows books. A new log will be given to the child if he or she finishes his or her log before August 13.

Prizes

- For every three books read each child will receive a free game of bowling at Century Lanes.
- For every 5 books read each child will receive on round of miniature golf.
- The first 20 children to read 10 books will receive a on- day water park pass.
- For every 20 books read each child is entered into a drawing to win one of 18 Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows hardback books (release date/drawing date July 21).

Notification of Winner(s)

All reading logs must be received at the Post Library by 8 p.m., July 19, to be eligible for the Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows hardback book drawing.

On July 20, the MWR marketing staff will collect all entries and draw 18 winners. An attempt will be made by marketing to contact the winners by telephone and/or by certified mail on July 20, from the information provided by the winners on the original entry form.

If the winners do not contact the marketing office to claim his/her prize by 5 p.m. on July 20, another winner will be chosen. The decision of the marketing office is final. The winners chosen from all entries received must meet all eligibility requirements.

Grand Prizes

The child with the most books read by the end of the program (8 p.m. on August 13) will receive the grand prize of the new Harry Potter Book, the hardback box set of books 1-6 and the Harry Potter Luminous Book Light. In the event of multiple readers having the same number of books read, the winner will be chosen by random drawing.

1st Place Prize: The first place winner (2nd most books read) will receive the new Harry Potter Book, and books 1-6 paperback box set.*

2nd Place Prize: Six second place winners (3rd most books read, etc.) will receive one of six books on audio CD.*

3rd Place Prize: Four third place winners will receive one of four Harry Potter movies.*

* If multiple readers have the same number of books read, the winner will be chosen by random drawing.

Winner's responsibility

The winners of the book drawings, grand prize, first-, second- and third-place prize winners agree to allow his/her name and city and state of residence (not complete street address or any other personal information) to be used for publicity purposes in future MWR Marketing publications. (i.e., John Doe of Columbia, S.C.) For the names of the winners, contact MWR Marketing Division, 3392 Magruder Avenue, Fort Jackson, S.C., or call (803)751-6990.

Ask the MEDDAC commander

Staying healthy during the summer;using sunscreen

Col. James Mundy

Q How can I protect my health when temperatures are extremely high?

A The following tips are important to use to protect your health when temperatures are extremely high. Remember to keep cool and use common sense.

Drink Plenty of Fluid
Increase fluid intake — regardless of your activity level. During heavy exercise in a hot environment, drink 2-4 glasses (16-32 ounces) of cool fluids each hour. Caution: If the doctor has prescribed a fluid-restrictive diet or diuretics for you, ask the doctor how much to drink.

During hot weather, you will need to drink more liquid than your thirst indicates. This is especially true for people age 65 and older who often have a decreased ability to respond to external temperature changes. Drinking plenty of liquids during exercise is especially important. However, avoid very cold beverages because they can cause stomach cramps. In addition, avoid drinks containing alcohol because they will actually cause you to lose more fluid.

Replace Salt and Minerals
Heavy sweating removes salt and minerals from the body. These are necessary for the body and must be replaced. The easiest and safest way to replace salt and minerals is through your diet. Drink fruit juice or a sports beverage during exercise or any work in the heat. Do not take salt tablets unless directed by a doctor. If on a low-salt diet, ask a doctor before changing what you eat or drink — especially before drinking a sports beverage.

Wear Appropriate Clothing and Sunscreen
Wear lightweight, light-colored, loose-fitting clothing. In the hot sun, a wide-brimmed hat will provide shade and keep the head cool.

Sunburn affects your body’s ability to cool itself and causes a loss of body fluids. It also causes pain and damages the skin. A variety of sunscreens are available to reduce risks of getting a sunburn. The protection that they offer against sunburn varies. Check the sun protection factor number on the label of the container.

Stay Cool Indoors
The most efficient way to beat the heat is to stay in an air-conditioned area. If you do not have an air conditioner or evaporative cooling unit, consider a visit to a shopping mall or public library for a few hours. Contact your local health department to see if there are any heat-relief shelters in your area. Electric fans may be useful to increase comfort and to draw cool air into your home at night, but do not rely on a fan as your primary cooling device during a heat wave. When the temperature is in the high 90s or higher, a fan will not prevent heat-related illness. A cool shower or bath is a more effective way to cool off.

Q How does sunscreen work?

A Sunscreens work by absorbing, reflecting or scattering the sun’s rays on the skin. They are available in many forms, including ointments, creams, gels, lotions, sprays, and wax sticks. All are labeled with SPF numbers. The higher the SPF, the greater the protection from sunburn. Some sunscreens, called “broad-spectrum,” reflect both UVA and UVB rays. They do a better job of protecting skin from other effects of the sun, including photo damage, photo dermatitis and sun rashes.

There are also physical sunscreens and sun blocks or chemical-free sunscreens that contain titanium dioxide or zinc oxide, which reflect UVB and UVA and can be used by people allergic to chemical sunscreens. Choose a sunscreen with a SPF 15 or higher.

SPF numbers indicate the length of time one can spend in the sun without risk of burning. Apply as much sunscreen as you would a lotion for dry skin. Spread it evenly over all uncovered skin, including ears and lips, but avoiding eyelids. Apply sunscreen about 30 minutes before sun exposure and reapply it every two hours even on cloudy days. If swimming or participating in intense physical activity, sunscreen may need to be applied more often. For more information on how to beat the heat this summer visit Web site CDC.gov.

SAVING LIVES: MECHANIC

Mike A. Glasch
Leader Staff

Like the Soldiers they protect, first responders hope they never have to put their primary-mission training to use in a real-world scenario. But both know that sooner or later they will.

With more than 40,000 people dying in car crashes each year and nearly 3 million more injured, minutes can mean the difference between life and death in an auto accident.

The best way to save those precious minutes is to be ready when the moment comes, and for first responders that means training with their equipment so they can quickly perform under pressure when the clock is ticking.

When Fort Jackson's Directorate of Emergency Services received new stabilizing equipment, (braces that keep a vehicle from shifting as emergency crews work) it was time to get everyone trained up on the new gear, which they did last week.

"If a vehicle is upside down or on its side, before we can do any cutting or patient removal, we have to stabilize the vehicle so it doesn't fall, flip or turn over and injure the patient even more," said Capt. David Hartness.

Getting a vehicle stabilized is just the first step. Next comes the Jaws of Life and a cutter. The Jaws of Life allow responders to spread small openings (such as where a vehicle's front door meets the front quarter panel) into larger ones — up to 28 inches. Responders can then cut away parts of the vehicle and easily get to the vehicle's occupants without moving them and risking further injury.

"We're not cutting the patient out of the vehicle," Hartness said. "We're cutting the vehicle away from the patient. The goal is to stabilize the patient and in order to do that we have to open up the vehicle as much as possible."

While cutting away parts of a vehicle is the best way to get to a patient, Darryl Kim, a rescue specialist with L.N. Curts & Sons who was training the firefighters on the equipment, stressed the importance of not trying to cut away parts of the vehicle right away.

"Rescues have gotten to be all cut, cut, cut responders have forgotten how to spread. By trying to just cut."

While terrain, weather and the number of responders can affect how quickly a patient can be extracted, Kim knows that the clock is ticking on him and his team. They strive to be quick but precise.

"The golden rule is that from the time we arrive, we want to have the patient delivered to medical facility," he said.

Michael.Glasch@jackson.army.mil

Pete Hines, firefighter/emergency medical technician, uses the Jaws of Life to separate the right front quarter panel of a vehicle. Separating the panel first makes it easier for first responders to cut away parts of a crashed vehicle.

Chapel

Purified soul: true state of success

Chaplain (Capt.) Dawud Agbere
369th Adjutant General Battalion

“Success” is a household term. We all want to be successful and we are keen on preparing and training our children at an early age to achieve success. We talk, hear, and read about it all the time. Arguably, the quest for success is the single most important preoccupation of human society. We work hard, compete with each other on it and even kill and die for its sake. Our life struggles and happiness are supposedly defined by our success or lack of it. But what actually is “success?”

I believe the true definition of success continues to elude us. Success in our society has almost become synonymous with material accomplishments and outward looks. To be successful implies being wealthy, having certain looks or body size, to be a celebrity, etc. We idolize, even worship, people because of their wealth or looks, regardless of how they acquired it — the end justifies the means. We have become so consumed by physical and outward appearances that we have neglected the core of our being, the inner-self, and as such, we have lost our sense of values.

I believe that this limited understanding of success is at the root of some of the social and moral challenges of our time: unbridled selfishness, high suicide and divorce rates, corporate corruption, and gang violence — just to mention a few. We even care more about our automobiles than we do about the homeless, the hungry and the needy; and certainly we are more concerned about our financial state than we care about the spiritual state of our souls.

Contrary to this materialistic sense of success, however, communities of faith portray a different picture of success: spiritual maturity.

The Muslim scripture, the Quran, tells us in 49:13 that “the most honored of you in the sight of God is the most righteous,” — certainly wealth or looks is not the criteria. The Bible also advises us in Matthew 6:33 that we should seek first the kingdom of God ... This means that success is far bigger than simply turning stone into gold. Success is about inner contentment, it is about closeness to God.

It is a state of ever-present consciousness of the creator, God the almighty. In other words, it is a state of spiritual attainment, when a person grows beyond his animal self and occupies a spiritual plane of complete inner purification. Simply put, it is about living a balanced life, and not just being good at racking up big bank accounts.

spiritual terms because it is permanent and enduring; whereas material attainment and outward looks are fleeting and deceptive. While we are encouraged to seek and enjoy the good of this world, faith teaches that earthly things matter only in so far as they serve as tools to the ultimate purpose of being, i.e., subservience to God.

Accessing a deceased loved one's safety deposit box

Capt. David Jones
Legal Assistance Attorney

One question that commonly arises when a person dies is, how to get access to the decedent's safe deposit box. In South Carolina, financial institutions must follow certain minimum procedures required by law to protect the property of the deceased.

The following information is provided as a guide for people who want to avoid the potential pitfalls in accessing a decedent's safe deposit box.

Any person who has entered a will into probate and has been provided a Certificate of Appointment as a personal representative will be able to perform an initial examination of the decedent's safe deposit box.

The personal representative will be required to provide the financial institution with the Certificate of Appointment from the Probate Court and identification indicating that he or she is the person identified on such document.

Depending upon the institution, the personal representative may be required to provide either a driver's license or birth certificate in addition to the Certificate of Appointment.

If the decedent's spouse is named as the personal representative in the will, the surviving spouse is only required to provide the financial institution with a copy of the will and identification such as a driver's license proving that he or she is the personal representative named in the will. It is advisable, however, for the surviving spouse to take a death certificate and marriage license, in addition to a copy of the will, when attempting to gain access to the safe deposit box.

If no copy of the will is available, a death certificate and marriage license, along with personal identification, should be sufficient for a surviving spouse to obtain access to the safe deposit box. South Carolina law provides that a decedent's spouse, parent, adult descendant or person named as a personal representative in a copy of the will, must be provided the opportunity to examine the contents of a safe deposit box.

This initial examination will take place in the presence of an officer of the financial institution and another employee. If requested, the financial institution must provide the person examining the safe deposit box the original will if the examining person is named in the will as the decedent's personal representative. The financial institution is also required to provide the examining person with any writing purporting to be a deed to a burial plot. In addition, any beneficiary is to be provided with an insurance policy on the life of the decedent if such documents are in the safe deposit box.

Once a Certificate of Appointment is obtained from the Probate Court the personal representative may enter the safe deposit box and inventory the contents in the presence of a bank officer and another employee. This inventory must be itemized in detail, including the opening of all bound packages, even if they are marked property of someone other than the deceased.

The personal representative and the bank employee must sign the inventory in the presence of a notary. The notary must also sign the inventory. This inventory is then sent to the South Carolina Tax Commission with a request for a waiver. Nothing other than the items discussed above may be removed from the safe deposit box until a tax waiver has been received from the South Carolina Tax Commission or a 10-day period has elapsed since the Tax Commission was notified and no objections have been made. Once a waiver has been received or the 10-day period has elapsed, the personal representative may remove the contents of the box and the box may be closed, or the box may be placed in the name of the personal representative.

A person other than the spouse or parent who does not have a copy of the will naming them as the personal representative is going to have the most difficult time obtaining access to the decedent's

Legal Assistance Office

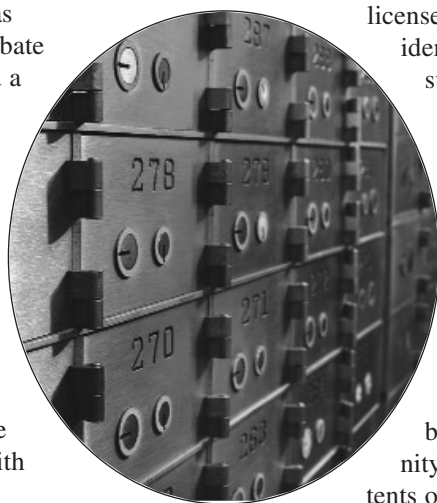

Fort Jackson's Legal Assistance Office is located in the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, 9475 Kershaw Rd., and is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Thursday. Appointments can be made by calling 751-4287.

The office accepts walk-ins for living wills, health care powers of attorney and durable powers of attorney, 1:30-3:30 p.m., Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Walk-ins are welcome for general legal questions and are accepted 1:30-4 p.m., Wednesdays.

safe deposit box. For example, a brother of the decedent who suspects he is named as the personal representative in the decedent's will may be denied access by a financial institution if he does not have a court order allowing him access or a copy of the will naming him as a personal representative. However, he may be allowed an examination with proper identification and an affidavit indicating that he is the decedent's brother. This situation emphasizes the necessity of providing personal representatives with a copy of the will naming them as the personal representative.

If you have questions regarding wills, administration of estates or any other legal issues call 751-4287.

Disabled vets to test limits during wheelchair games

Donna Miles
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — More than 20 veterans injured during combat in Iraq and Afghanistan will join some 600 other disabled veterans next week for the 27th National Veterans Wheelchair Games.

The games, sponsored by the Department of Veterans Affairs and Paralyzed Veterans of America, will run from June 19-23 at venues throughout the Milwaukee area.

The games are open to all U.S. military veterans under VA care who use wheelchairs for sports competition due to spinal cord injuries, certain neurological conditions, amputations or other mobility impairments.

Participants will compete in 17 events, including track and field, swimming, basketball, weightlifting, softball, air guns, quad rugby, pool, bowling, table tennis, archery, handcycling, wheelchair slalom, power soccer and a motorized rally.

Two exhibition events, trapshooting and wheelchair curling, are new to this year’s agenda. Also new this year will be a demonstration track-and-field clinic for athletes able to stand using prosthetic devices.

Aubrey Youngs, a 26-year-old paraplegic who was injured during a deployment to Afghanistan with her Indiana Army National Guard unit, will be among this year’s participants.

Youngs made her debut at the games in 2006 and is returning this year to compete in archery, table tennis and pool events. “I am ready to go for the gold in 2007,” she said. “I have been practicing archery for months, but table tennis is my game!”

She called the camaraderie she found at the games as important as the competition. “It is so nice to get together with people who don’t judge you for being in that chair,” she said. “It is great to have an opportunity to do normal activities that are often not available to those of us in wheelchairs.”

Also competing for his second year will be Jeff Snover, an Army chief warrant officer who suffered a severe spinal cord injury just three months after returning from Iraq.

Snover said he plans to top his performance at last year’s games, where he won gold medals in table tennis and weightlifting and a silver medal in softball. Ultimately, he said, he’s set his sights on the 2012 Paralympics.

Like Youngs, Snover said he gained a lot at last year’s games through camaraderie with his fellow athletes. “I appreciated the assistance I got from other veterans when I was a novice, and I hope to return the favor this year,” he said.

Former UH-60 Black Hawk crew chief Darrell Lawrence will be a first-timer at this year’s wheelchair games. Lawrence was rendered a paraplegic after his unit returned from Iraq and was transferring from Fort Campbell, Ky., to Hunter Army Airfield, in Georgia.

He said he’s determined to work through and around his limitations as he competes in air gun shooting, wheelchair slalom, handcycling and two swimming events. “I have always tried to do my best at anything I commit to,” he said.

Lawrence said he was encouraged through his association with other disabled veterans and by watching what they’ve been able to achieve. “It is 100 percent motivating and uplifting,” he said.

Veterans Affairs Secretary R. James Nicholson, who will open the games June 19, praised the games as an opportunity for disabled veterans to share in the camaraderie of friendly competition. “The determination, stamina and competitive spirit on display at the games are an inspiration,” he said.
